A lot of interviews can be boring due to the fact as the interviewee is vague with answers, so how to overcome this is to use Probing Questions

Overcome Vagueness

Past Base Probing Questions

Could you tell me more about (insert topic)

What were some of the biggest hurdles you faced when trying to do (insert topic) and how did you overcome them?

Could you help by giving an example?

And what happened after that?

Roughly how much of your time are you spending on that?

What's the cheapest way our listeners can get started?

Why was that important to you?

What does your average day look like doing (insert topic) could you walk us through an average day?

Future Based Probing Questions

Could you tell me more about (insert topic)

What's the big picture our listeners should try and grasp when it comes too (insert topic)...?

Whats the end goal for yourself?

Are you studying anything right now to advance in field of (insert topic)?

What, specifically, will you do next week to progress in the field of (insert topic)?

Probe Questions

So for our listeners, who aren't as experienced as you are, let's break this down step-by-step for them.

"You said they need to (insert topic) if they have never done this before. What should they do first?"